SITUATION SUMMARY

Northern California Weather of Concern

- The large majority of the latest system has passed as it continues east. The low pressure bringing the winds and rain is forecast to move over the Great Basin this weekend. Scattered showers are predicted, albeit with a medium to low confidence, at times both Saturday and Sunday. The locations and timing of any rain remain to be determined. This is a cool storm so temperatures will be well below normal and it's possible the area could up to 4 inches of snow impacting Sierra passes above 8000 feet, such as Sonora and Tioga. Rainfall in the valleys could reach 0.50 inches through the weekend, with higher amounts possible if a band of rain holds over any one area. An additional 0.25 - 0.50 inches of rainfall estimated is for King Fire Burn area.
- A Winter Weather advisory has been posted for the Sierra above 8,000 feet through 2300 hours this evening. One (1) to four (4) inches of snow was observed overnight, with several more inches possible through this evening. This may cause chain controls or road closures on Highways 4 and 108.

Southern California Weather of Concern

- Monsoonal moisture is returning to Southeastern California. Isolated to scattered showers and thunderstorms will develop across southeast California this afternoon, with widespread showers and embedded strong thunderstorms expected this evening through Saturday. Atmospheric conditions are favorable for some fast moving, organized thunderstorms which can produce heavy rain, large hail, and strong winds. Individual thunderstorms will generally move to the north at 30 to 40 mph which will diminish the threat of flash flooding with any one storm. However, training storms are possible which could repeatedly produce heavy rain over the same local areas.
- Looking ahead to next week, forecast confidence in the occurrence of the first Santa Ana wind event of the season is increasing. Surface high pressure building over the Great Basin and a strong upper level ridge of high pressure over the Southwest U.S. will bring a prolonged period of hot, very dry, and windy weather during the middle to latter part of next week; increasing fire weather concerns due to an extended period of hot, dry, and windy conditions. Locations to include; the Inland Empire, Orange County Coast, Riverside County Mountains, San Bernardino County Mountains, San Diego County Coast, San Diego County Mountains, San Diego County Valleys, Santa Ana Mountains and Foothills may experience impacts as early as Wednesday morning through at least next Saturday.

SITUATION SUMMARY

Cal OES Earthquake and Tsunami Program Situation Report

Long Valley Caldera, Mammoth Lakes

Report Date: Saturday, September 27, 2014

Situation Summary:

The United States Geological Survey (USGS) Volcano Observatory is tracking an earthquake swarm in Long Valley Caldera, which started September 25, 2014 at 4 AM. The swarm is located 7 miles east of the town of Mammoth Lakes, approximately one mile north of the airport. Since September 25 there have been more than 500 earthquakes of magnitude M1.0 and above, including 8 earthquakes between M3.0 to M3.8 that produced locally felt shaking. This is one of several earthquake swarms that have occurred in the Caldera this year. The USGS does not see any evidence for anomalous ground deformation associated with the swarm at this time. Despite the several felt earthquakes, this is still rather modest activity, compared with the much more energetic levels that we witnessed through the 1980s and 1990s. In that sense, it is not out of the ordinary for this geologically active area. The earthquakes are small, brittle-failure (rock breaking) events. The earthquakes do not result from the underground movement of magma. The swarm events pose no immediate hazard. The USGS California Volcano Observatory will continue to track this activity and provide updates as appropriate.

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

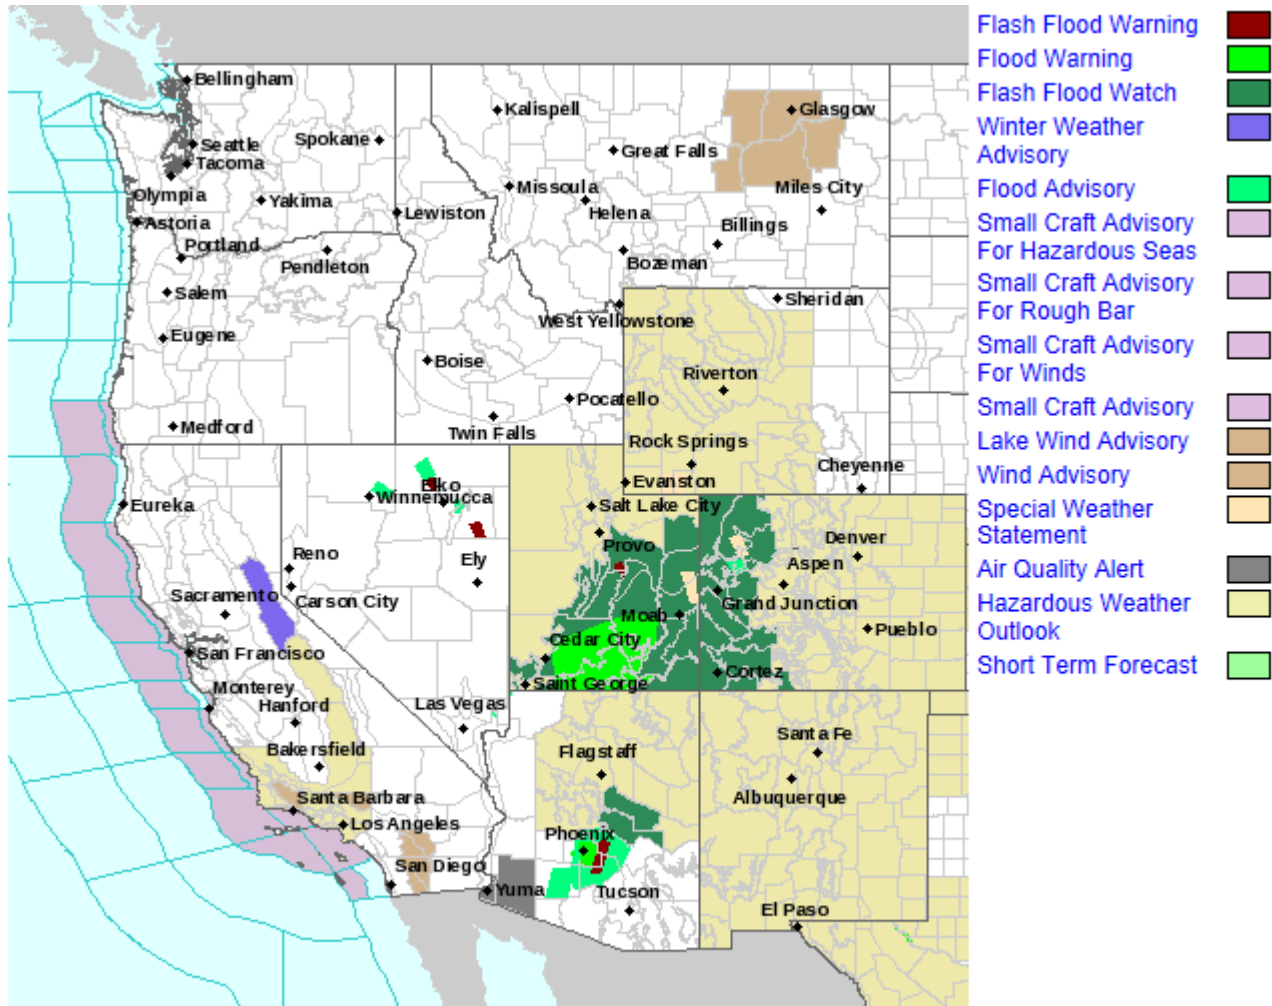

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The weather system over California will continue moving slowly east today and Sunday. Moisture wrapping around the system will continue to bring cloudiness, showers and thunderstorm chances to Northern California, primarily over the eastern areas. Less cloudiness and precipitation will be in all areas each day. Any thunderstorms will be wet. A weak front will arrive at the coast Monday, but there will be little chance of significant rainfall, and that will mostly be possible along the coast north of Cape Mendocino. Just some cloudiness will spread inland otherwise. A high pressure ridge begins to strengthen off the coast Tuesday for the beginning of a drying, warming trend with periods of north to east north east (offshore winds). As the high moves into place along the coast Tuesday night and Wednesday, moderately strong northerly winds will develop, and some areas will also have poor to moderate overnight Relative Humidity recovery with mild nighttime temperatures. High pressure will remain in place late next week into the weekend with dry and unseasonably warm weather. The north to east north east winds are expected to be much lighter Thursday and Friday but then appear likely to strengthen noticeably for next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered showers and isolated thunderstorms will continue over the Sierra, with up to an additional inch of rainfall, through Sunday afternoon as an area of low pressure spins near the California and Nevada border. Westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through tonight. The low pressure area will also cause temperatures to be 10 to 15 degrees below normal through Sunday, with mid 50s to mid 60s in the mountains and 70s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly above 30% through this weekend. Temperatures will warm and humidity will lower next week as a ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. The ridge will become strong starting next Thursday, with temperatures warming to 10 to 20 degrees above normal and humidity dropping into the single digits and teens. Winds still look to be light across the region Sunday through the end of next week.
